

The case concerns events which began on February 22, 2020, during a cell search of Plaintiff's cell at the Allegheny County Jail. Named as defendants are two corrections officers: Tonya Caldwell and Ryan Tucker,³ who have been sued in their individual and official capacities. According to the Complaint, Defendant C/O Tucker attempted to perform a strip search of Plaintiff as Defendant C/O Caldwell was present in the doorway of his cell. Defendant C/O Tucker made Plaintiff take off his shoes and pants and after Plaintiff voiced many complaints about a female officer being present, Defendant C/O Tucker stopped and allowed Plaintiff to put back on his pants.

According to the Complaint, after the search, Plaintiff was cuffed by Defendant C/O Tucker and placed outside his cell. During the cell inspection, Plaintiff saw Defendants toss from his cell his personal items, legal work, and keep-on-person medication. He also avers that he saw Defendant C/O Caldwell pour hair gel out of its container and onto his bed and blankets. After the cell inspection was finished, Defendant C/O Caldwell had Plaintiff's personal items and legal work placed in separate trash bags. She then told Plaintiff she was "sending it to I.A. to be tested for drugs." Plaintiff was permitted to return to his cell, but he did not have access to his medication, or any other personal items that were disposed of during the cell search such as "toothbrushes, toothpaste, soap, and toilet paper," for a period of nineteen hours.

Plaintiff raises the following three claims against the Defendants in their individual and official capacities: (1) an Eighth Amendment medical claim for allegedly showing deliberate indifference towards his serious medical needs when Defendants disposed of his medication; (2) an Eighth Amendment cruel and unusual punishment claim for Defendants subjecting him to "inhumane living conditions" in his cell when they deprived him of his personal belongings, including but not limited to toiletries; and (3) a Fourth Amendment claim against Defendant Tucker for conducting, or attempting to conduct, a strip search while in the presence of a female corrections officer.

The Supreme Court of the United States has issued two decisions that pertain to the standard of review for failure to state a claim upon which relief could be granted. The Supreme Court held that a complaint must include factual allegations that “state a claim to relief that is plausible on its face.” Ashcroft v. Iqbal, 556 U.S. 662, 678 (2009) (citing Bell Atl. Corp. v. Twombly, 550 U.S. 544, 570 (2007)). “[W]ithout some factual allegation in the complaint, a claimant cannot satisfy the requirement that he or she provide not only ‘fair notice’ but also the ‘grounds’ on which the claim rests.” Phillips v. County of Allegheny, 515 F.3d 224, 232 (3d Cir. 2008). In determining whether a plaintiff has met this standard, a court must reject legal conclusions unsupported by factual allegations, “[t]hreadbare recitals of the elements of a cause of action, supported by mere conclusory statements;” “labels and conclusions;” and “ ‘naked assertion[s]’ devoid of ‘further factual enhancement.’ ” Iqbal, 556 U.S. at 678 (citations omitted). Mere “possibilities” of misconduct are insufficient. Id. at 679. The Court of Appeals for the Third Circuit has summarized the inquiry as follows:

To determine the sufficiency of a complaint, a court must take three steps. First, the court must “tak[e] note of the elements a plaintiff must plead to state a claim.” Ashcroft v. Iqbal, 556 U.S. 662, 129 S.Ct. 1937, 1947, 173 L.Ed.2d 868 (2009). Second, the court should identify allegations that, “because they are no more than conclusions, are not entitled to the assumption of truth.” Id. at 1950. Third, “whe[n] there are well-pleaded factual allegations, a court should assume their veracity and then determine whether they plausibly give rise to an entitlement for relief.” Id. This means that our inquiry is normally broken into three parts: (1) identifying the elements of the claim, (2) reviewing the complaint to strike conclusory allegations, and then (3) looking at the well-pleaded components of the complaint and evaluating whether all of the elements identified in part one of the inquiry are sufficiently alleged.

When considering a Rule 12(b)(6) motion, the court's role is limited to determining whether a plaintiff is entitled to offer evidence in support of his claims. See Scheuer v. Rhodes, 416 U.S. 232, 236 (1974). The court does not consider whether a plaintiff will ultimately prevail. See id. A defendant bears the burden of establishing that a plaintiff's complaint fails to state a claim. See Gould Elecs. v. United States, 220 F.3d 169, 178 (3d Cir. 2000).

Viewed in light of the forgoing liberal pleading standards, this Court finds that the allegations of the Complaint, when taken as true, allows the Court to draw a reasonable inference that the defendants are liable for the misconduct alleged, and that the complaint meets the standards as enunciated in Twombly and Iqbal. See also Fowler v. UPMC Shadyside, 578 F.3d 203, 210 (3d Cir. 2019). Accordingly,

AND NOW, this 10th day of March, 2021, after due consideration to Defendants' motion to dismiss the complaint, the response in opposition, and the reply, IT IS HEREBY ORDERED that Defendants' motion to dismiss IS DENIED without prejudice to Defendants raising the issues set forth therein in a motion for summary judgment at the appropriate time following discovery.
